

SUMMARY.

The British on Tuesday morning attacked positions in the neighbourhood of Paschenchale.

The Canadians simultaneously attacked Paschenchale, along the ridge, and stormed up the remaining slopes of Metelchale Spur.

They entered Metelchale, north-west of Paschenchale, and according to latest reports, are continuing the advance.

The British are engaged in heavy fighting at Polderchale (Chateau), four miles to the south of Paschenchale.

It is believed the British have the advantage in the battle now raging.

Tuesday's fighting has vastly improved the whole of the situation around Ypres. Rosters are now under constant British fire.

The United Press correspondent says that the Germans, when at close quarters with the British, are continuing the advance.

"We went through Paschenchale," he continues, "like water through a sieve."

The firing of the enemy from the ruins of Paschenchale was comparatively light, except from the north-east.

Here the Bavarians from behind tumbled walls up to a stiff fight with machine guns.

The prisoners were mostly young, and in unusually good condition.

This fact indicates that only the best have remained necessary to meet the British.

The prisoner declared that from crosses were shrouded upon the troops, including men who had never been near the front line.

Mr. Philip Gibbs, telegrapher, "We are ready today that we believe will prove the capture of Paschenchale."

The Canadian, fought their way through the ruins of Paschenchale.

"The gas has been," says Mr. Gibbs, "they are the gas and the most terrible British achievement of the war."

A German official report states that English attacks led to fighting all day around Paschenchale.

"The enemy's assault on Gheluvelt broke down," the despatch continues.

Impressive scenes occurred at the burial of the first American killed.

The whole American force is now impatient to attack the enemy.

The Austro-Germans have intensified their pressure from the Upper Tagliamento against the Italian left.

Two enemy has also played detachments towards the middle and lower course of the river.

The Italians were compelled to evacuate positions in the mountainous area, which the enemy occupied.

A German official message says: "We have possession of the whole of the Tagliamento to the coast."

"The Italians," it adds, "are retreating between the mountains and the sea, contradictions indicating their retirement."

The Federal Cabinet has decided to take another referendum on the question of conscription.

The referendum will not be taken on the lines of the last one, but will be upon a single scheme.

"This scheme is to be fully outlined by the Prime Minister at Bendigo on Monday next."

Mr. Holmes last night said he had no idea such an early decision was contemplated.

He expressed the hope that absolute freedom of discussion would be permitted in the Press and on the public platform.

The Federal Parliament will not move the taking of the referendum.

The Government will rely upon the powers conferred by the War Measures Act for authority to take the referendum.
